the well
newton college of the sacred heart
newton, massachusetts

Twenty-one years ago, when Newton began with forty students, college campuses were not making headlines as they are in 1967. Now Newton's 800 students, deeply concerned with the problems which get campuses into the news, are concerned also to keep as much as possible the spirit of its early unadvertised years.

It did take some advertising to add eleven other buildings to the original Schrafft house ... among them the academic building – the art building – and the chapel.

In the chapel – whether the old or the new – each generation of students can best learn what Newton has always tried to teach: the ability to judge clearly but kindly all people, events, and circumstances.

And in trying to maintain Newton's characteristic respect for ideas, another center was outgrown and replaced — the library.

In the library, completed in 1967, Newton students deepen by their own research what they have learned from the faculty: how to carry on the dialogue between the sciences and the humanities.

Creatively, in the new art building, students express their involvement in the real – not just in the academic – world.

And there is still space on Newton's fifty acre campus for the science building that we must finish within the next two years.

Newton, having reached legal age, can keep its spirit because it is a living spirit, which can grow and yet remain itself.

administration

But in case you should think our education was wasted
We hasten to explain That having once been to college
you can never really again Believe anything that anyone says and that of course is an asset
In a world like ours.

the purple, his training in syntax
Is also a training in thought.

Somebody talking to somebody
But certainly it was fun while it lasted
And I got my degree
And was stamped as a person of intelligence and culture
For wherever two or three Persons of intelligence and culture
Are gathered together in talk.

the christmas dance

Is that dance slowing in the mind of man
That made him think the universe could hum?

junior weekend

For other tunes and other wanton beats
Have tossed my heart and fiddled through my brain.

Tell Me:
Which is the way I take;
Out of what door do I go,
Where and to whom?

For they are all my friends: I saw one slide
Down a steep hillside on a cake of ice,-
Or was that in a book?
